Mother Goose

Earlier in the morning I gladly agreed to grill chicken for dinner. But, as seems to happen frequently, my very full day was winding down much later than I anticipated. Accordingly, as I got the grill ready, the sun had already disappeared and a slight orange glow was still giving a faint and mysterious light on the farm. Most things were already dark and difficult to see.

A few minutes later I walked out of the house and headed straight to the smoking grill on the other side of our front yard. It was still and quiet all around. As I walked I happened to notice something moving in the chicken's pasture. The chickens were all in bed now, but I saw the most unusual sight: A large orangey-white goose. Quiet - even while I walked by! She was outside all by herself, which is very rare. Did I say she was quiet? Definitely odd! I pretended not to watch her as I walked to the grill. I really wanted to see what was going on. I guess she was comfortable enough with me, as she seemed to not even notice I was there. Again, very odd.

She was slowly, calmly, dutifully walking around the outside of their house – sort of back and forth. As I finally figured it out, I couldn't keep from smiling. She was just making sure everybody was inside and that it was safe for the chickens to go to bed. Yes, she was acting like Mother Goose, making sure her little hens were taken care of. I had never noticed her doing that, so it may have been something related to the commotion with the grill that made her a little more suspicious. I slowed way down and watched her quietly making her rounds. She would take a few steps then stop and look around. Finally she slipped inside their house in total silence.

Geese aren't the most graceful birds when they walk, but even her pacing around was done much better and more smoothly than normal. She clearly had a purpose and was very focused! There's no doubt she was thinking "Well...it looks like everything's ok out here. My hens are all in bed and fine...I can go to bed now." It may sound strange to you, but it was a treat so see such a protecting, soft side to our obnoxious and LOUD goose!
